THE BYGONE ERA

THE SAGA OF ELEGANCE – MUGHAL JEWELLERY

Five centuries ago, India was under the rule and influence of the Mughal dynasty. The Mughal royalty were connoisseurs of architecture, arts, food, clothing, and, of course, jewellery. During the Mughal rule, jewellery-making was given utmost importance. This art gave birth to unique jewellery pieces studded with chunky gemstones and enamelled with motif designs. Royal family members and people of high rank proudly displayed such jewellery all over their bodies, from jewelled turbans and head jewellery to thick-set toe rings.

The Mughal Empire, with its grandeur and opulence, has left behind an enduring legacy in the form of exquisite jewels that continue to captivate the imagination of people around the world. These jewels are not just accessories; they are storytellers of the past, representing the empire's rich history, culture, and artistry. Mughal jewels are distinguished by their intricate designs, combining precious stones with meticulous metalwork. The use of emeralds, diamonds, rubies, sapphires, and pearls set in gold or silver was prevalent. The empire's wealth allowed the procurement of the finest gemstones, which were then transformed into masterpieces by skilled artisans.

Mughal jewellery is a marriage of Indian intricacy and Middle Eastern elegance, uniting Indian gold work with Middle Eastern floral designs. Heavy stonework and elaborate enamelling are two major features that distinguish Mughal jewellery from other Indian jewellery. Its base is made mainly of gold. Large precious and semi-precious gemstones are incorporated into the jewellery pieces. Kundan and polki stones are important aspects of Mughal jewellery.

This opulent necklace from Kalasha Fine Jewels is beautifully hand-crafted with Polkis, Emeralds, Diamonds and Pearls. The necklace exceptionally depicts the Royal Heritage of Mughal Era.
